

GLAD THE EMPLOYER LAUNCHES JOBS PLAN

EXCLUSIVE

ANDREW CLENNELL

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH'S BIG WIN FOR PROJECT SYDNEY

PREMIER Gladys Berejiklian will today pledge $65 million as part of a major training scheme to help cut the Western Sydney youth jobless rate. The government will also nearly double its graduate intake to 200 and an extra $10 million will be put aside to help vulnerable people get into work.

Ms Berejiklian will tonight announce the ambitious jobs package at The Daily Telegraph's Project Sydney gala dinner in Bankstown. The Premier will also unveil a high-level taskforce to review the pathways from school to vocational education into the workforce.

The announcements will cap off the Project Sydney campaign, which has fought for commitments from the state government for health and education infrastructure the city badly requires.

Underscoring the main push of the campaign, to improve access to jobs for young Sydneysiders, Ms Berejiklian will tonight say she wants "everyone in this city" to have the same chances of a long and successful career no matter their background.

She will also point to the 334 cranes dominating the Sydney skyline as a sign of our bright future.